" MAJOR HOFFMAN.

I am taking a rest after a round of gayety and social activity which I never equaled before, and I doubt my going into the "swim" again next winter, or for some winters to come, for that matter. I am desirous to explain my reasons for this withdrawal from society, and in order to do so I shall be oblige to tell you of my relations with Major

You see, I have always felt that it was, in a sense, my duty to move in good society, and I have been at some pains so to arrange my affairs and social relations as to be able to attend most of the better class of private entertainments given in the city during the past two or three winters. It not only gave me no small enjoyment, but it also assisted me naterially in my business.

It was a matter of considerable difficulty to secure an invitation to the Van Schoonhoven reception, but I managed it—no matter how—and it was at this reception that I made the acquaintance of Major Hoffman.

I had strolled into Dr. Van Schoonhoven's office to get out of the hot and crowded reception room, and in the dim light was leaning against the window casing, idly tapping on the glass with my nails, when I noticed at the top of the window sash a bit of metal gleaming in the semidarkness. I touched it and found that it was part of a burglar alarm, moving when the window was opened upon another bit of metal two inches above, and by contact completing an electric circuit of some sort.

I am somewhat of an electrician, and my interest and curiosity were at once aroused. Without stopping to think, I unscrewed the upper bit of metal with my knife, and after twisting off the wire which led from it into the woodwork was examining it when I heard a light step at the door, and looking round found standing by the table a tall, dark skinned man in evening dress, with black mustache and imperial, and long, rather curly black hair-in all suggesttanic majesty.

By one of those impulses which overcome us all at times I slipped the bit of metal into my pocket and turned toward the stranger, whom from his dress and manner I assumed to be one of the guests at the reception. "I hope I do not intrude," he said

"Oh, no," I hastened to reply.

am glad some one else can enjoy the coolness here." "I think I have not the pleasure of your acquaintance," the stranger queried smiling, and with a slight foreign ac-"As guests in this house I trust we need no formal introduction-my name is Hoffman, Major Franz Hoff-"And I am William B. Vance, very much at your service, sir," I returned, decidedly pleased with my new friend's voice and manner. "I am indeed glad to make your acquaintance, major."

I found Major Hoffman a very agreeable fellow, a gentleman of refinement and culture, polished, well informed, a ready conversationist, though decidedly reserved as to himself, and a smoker of excellent cigars. We discussed books. yachting, horses, politics, etc., the major showing himself a man of wide reading and depth of thought along many lines.

I could learn nothing, however, as to his own occupation-he was especially reticent on that point. Major Hoffman casually let slip that he had been in Europe until recently. His business had taken him there on two days' warning and had brought him back as suddenly. He could not tell how soon the present matter would be disposed of or where he would go next.

"I am an uncertain fellow," he said, laughing, "and never know my own plans two weeks in advance. Indeed my plans are largely made for me, and I go and come usually at the bidding of others."

While we were talking Dr. Van Schoonhoven entered, and I did not see the major again that evening, as I presently returned to the reception room, the major remaining for a chat with his

I was decidedly ill at ease, for I had that piece of burglar alarm in my pocket and could find no opportunity to put it back. I was fully aware that my hasty action might be misconstrued by one who did not know me, and I was anxious lest the major had seen me take it down, though not in the most remote way had either of us referred to the subject. It was no business of his, though, in any case, and I deemed myself in no way bound to consult him about so trivial an affair. Besides I was inclined to think he had not seen me take the piece of metal. It subsequently appeared, however, that he did see me take it, and that his actions were strongly influenced by the ideas this trifling incident suggested to him.

As it happened. I found no opportunity to approach the window again, and went home with the hit of metal still in my waistcoat pocket.

That night an attempt was made to rob Dr. Van Schoonhoven's house, the burglars entering by the very window from which I had removed the burglar alarm. They did not succeed in securing any plunder, but were frightened away before any valuables were found.

Now, this attempted burglary was similar to several others which had taken place at some of the finest residences in town, in each case following only a day or two after a reception to our ball similar to that at Dr. Van Schoonhoven's house. As it happened, in every instance but one I had been a guest at the entertainment, and I had almost begun to fear lest the people who had invited me should regard me as a bird of evil omen and cease to "request the honor of my presence" at their

Probably you are thinking of Major Hoffman in connection with these robberies?

I must confess that I did not, though had occasion afterward to associate him, more or less directly, with all of them. I had met him but once and for a short time only, and his name did not occur to me until two weeks later, when Senator Cox's daughter was married. At the reception in the evening I met the major again, suave, polite, but, as before, suggesting Mephistopheles.

I encountered him a dozen times that evening, on the back veranda, in the conservatory, in the garden, till I began to regard him as my evil genius. Particularly did he hover in the neighborhood of the roomful of silverware and jewelry which comprised the wed ding gifts. Though I did not see him touch them or hear him speak of them, it seemed as if some irresistible fascina tion held him in their vicinity. I think others noticed it as well as I, for I saw them looking at him and remarking upon his actions among themselves.

When I left the house, the last person I saw was the major, who went out with me and left me at the corner below, turning down the side street with a wave of his hand and a cheery "Goodnight, Vance!' I saw the major again that night, and it happened in this wise: The moon had gone down, and it was nearly 3 o'clock in the morning when, with two friends, I stood in the garden in the rear of the senator's house under the shadow of a large bush. I still wore my evening dress, but I had a soft hat pulled down over my eyes and wore a dark overcoat. In my hand I held a revolver, as did my two companions. In pursuance of my project, it was only a minute's work to quietly open the door at the rear of the house and the glass door at the head of the stairs within. Two minutes later we were in the room with the wedding gifts. A dim light burned in the chandelier, and at the other side of the room the figure of a man lav upon a sofa. I slipped over to his side, and with my revolver close

At the first soft clink of the silver in the bag, into which they were guardedly slipping the wedding gifts, the room was suddenly flooded with light, and I heard an oath from one of my companions. I turned quickly, to see Major Hoffman and three policemen standing in the doorway covering us with revolvers. I had time only to see the major smile triumphantly and nod in my direction before my arms were seized from behind, my pistol wrenched from my hand, and with two sharp clicks of locking handcuffs I was a prisoner. The major flung back his coat so that I could see the police badge shining on his waistcoat as he remarked: "Hardly expected to meet again tonight, eh, Vance? You tried that burglar alarm dodge once too often, let me tell you. Gentlemen, you are my pris-

Theen and Tolstol.

Blumenthal, the great theater manager of Berlin, was once talking with Tolstoi about Ibsen and said: "I have put a good many of his plays on the stage, but I can't say that I quite understand them. Do you understand them?" "Ibsen doesn't understand them himself," Tolstoi replied. "He just writes them and then sits down and waits. After awhile his expounders and explainers come and tell him what he meant."-San Francisco Argonaut.

gate or Horsemonger Lane jail very close. The police were dead against prize fights, which were excuses for a gigantic form of extortion. Two ruffians of the lowest class contracted to batter one another about in order to extract the guineas from the swells, the toffs and the supporters of the "noble art of self defense." A programme had to be se-cretly arranged, a special train had to be secured for the army of men, the swells about town and the scum of the metropolis, who lived upon the excitement or the pelf of prize fights. There was a certain official countenance to these illegal "mills." The editor of Bell's Life in London constituted himself the arbiter on these occasions. This was the organ of the prizefighter. The editor received the stakes deposited, acted as referee and afterward described the fights in a jargon delightfully humorous. "Tapping the claret," "One in the bread basket," "A rouser on the conk," were all phrases invented by the editors of Bell's Life. The night before it was necessary to go to a sporting pub to get "the office" and to receive for a valuable consideration the special railway ticket. The vigil of the fight was usually spent in the "wild west," for in those days there was no closing hour. Restaurants and public houses could keep open as long as they liked. Races were run in the Haymarket at 3 o'clock in the morning, and about 4 or 5 the "swells," all in evening dress, would assemble at the railway station, each one in charge of a specially appointed protector.

The scene at the railway station was indescribable. The officials made them selves scarce, and the station was handed over to mob law. On the platform the pocket of every unprotected man or youth was emptied, and when the train started amid a chorus of obscenity and blasphemy no one knew the destination. It might be a deserted chalk pit, or an old quarry, or a lonely wood, or a river marsh. Suddenly the train would stop, and away went the excursionists tramp ing over field and meadow. The princi pals were muffled up. The attendant carried the ropes and stakes, and when the ring was pitched every one who had a sovereign left was fleeced to buy the colors of the favorite—a silk handker-chief that could not have cost four rope. chief that could not have cost fourpence.

I forbear to describe the hideous blas phemy that soiled the morning air or the mad execrations during the mill. When a champion's eye was bunged up with a blow, his second lanced it and have seen many a brave young fellow faint at the hideous sight of a prize fight -soldiers, must of them, who would have gone to battle without flinching. -London Truth.
